The federal historic site and park sits on a spit of land providing a majestic view of the mouth of giant Tampa Bay. It's a monument to the historic moment when the Spanish explorer came ashore on May 30, 1539, and started his four-year trek across the continent. But some argue the actual landfall was at Charlotte Harbor, about 100 miles south, or the Little Manatee River, a little to the north. Other materials show the culture of the natives who inhabited Florida before the Europeans but were extinct within two centuries of their arrival. Earlier, in 1513, Juan Ponce de León had planted the cross and the flag of Spain on Florida's east coast. Spain didn't have a clue of how far La Florida went, so the king sent De Soto to inspect the property.
