The position of the archbishop of Canterbury at the heart of the Establishment engendered requests to be patron, advocate or opponent of almost every conceivable development in national life. One such entanglement was his role as unofficial advisor to the Lord Chamberlain in the matter of the licensing of stage plays. The various grounds on which Archbishops Randall Davidson (1903â€“28) and Cosmo Gordon Lang (1928â€“42) in particular offered their advice to the Lord Chamberlain are then examined. The article thus provides a case study of the singular and often anomalous The jurisdiction of the archbishop of Canterbury, an historico-juridical study.
