After reading the book “Secret Thoughts of Successful Women” and seeing that all of my fears were really the Impostor Syndrome at work, I realized that I had been saying “NO” to my own success all along, and didn’t need to. In fact, just after I finished reading the book, I was able to go to the next hairy scary big time conference, rolling with the Big Guys and land a huge contract and exclusive alliance with a very lucrative client company. I’d love to add your success story to the list! Even small successes count; in fact, meaningful progress is all about small wins. Single detail after 2 weeks, and even had to present and defend the result of the first year of the project (that I had not been involved in) in front of a jury after a month of starting with the project. The Net Result series of books (four volumes) contain the success stories of the winners of the most prestigious AWARD in Australia today, for business and professional women. It was originated in South Australia by Lucille Orr and her Australian Executive Women’s Network members way back in 1987. It was the Australian Executive Woman of the Year Award and then it became the Telecom Executive Woman Award when Telecom Australia became the naming sponsors and the Award expanded nationally in 1991. Due to the overwhelming success of the Award in 1995 when Telecom changed its name it also renamed; IFAP Success Stories 4. HANDMAKING OF TACTILE PICTURE BOOKS for the blind and partially sighted children and sensibilisation of children who can see. The world production of picture books for visually impaired children is very limited and, in Croatia, don’t exist. Blind children in Croatia get their first book in Braille in the first year of elementary school. Women and children are among the most affected groups in the population due to low literacy levels, poverty, and gender related social issues. Improving literacy levels can help increase economic empowerment and develop life skills which in turn can reduce HIV infection rates and help improve the lives of women and children. The result was a major national infrastructure project spearheaded by librarians. In these success stories, read about how female entrepreneurs overcame challenges. Success stories.
