The Unstable EMS, ISSN 0265-8003, Centre for Economic Policy Research, 1993, Barry Eichengreen, Charles Wyplosz, 1993

The number of transactions of interbank loans and the number of participants of the market decreases because of Central Bank internal policy of the inefficient credit organizations reduction. There is a narrowing of the interbank lending market, because the counterparties are not sure in each other and there is a mistrust crisis. The transition’s difficulties of the Russian banking system to the international standards Basel III have a negative impact on the interbank market, as not all credit organizations can sustain strict requirements of the international standard, which increases the number of transactions of interbank loans and the number of participants of the market decreases because of Central Bank internal policy of the inefficient credit organizations reduction.