Poetry in a Time of Terror: Essays in the Postcolonial Preternatural

By Rukmini Bhaya Nair

Oxford University Press, 2009. Hardcover. Book Condition: New. 14 x 21 cm. If the law of poetry is that it is ambiguous, then, equally, the law of terror is that it equivocates. Poetry in a Time of Terror explores the fundamental conflict between these two seemingly similar but in fact dramatically different codes invented by human society. Literature survives in all human cultures because it acts as an evolutionary safeguard against that fatal terror of "the other" that has always led the human race to wage war against itself. The essays in this volume dwell on the poetic stances assumed by "terror" in relation to nation, language, translation, borders, gender, sexuality, and other forms of difference. Rukmini Bhaya Nair's original insight is that terror in its various forms is not necessarily best probed by military intelligence alone but by types of "counter intelligence" belonging to quite another realm of the human imagination. Poems, Nair argues, even the most everyday ones, are our first language when confronted with the incomprehensible, with sublime joy, or with terror out of the sky. They are veritable texts of crisis. A number of challenging questions arise from this foundational premise. What connects our "new" postcolonial,...

Introduction: Postcolonial literature refers to writing from regions of the world that were once colonies of European powers. The term refers to a very broad swath of writing in many languages, but the emphasis in this class (in an English department) is on writing in English. The writers in this course come from quite different backgrounds, including Africa, South Asia, and the Caribbean, but they struggle with some similar issues, chief among them being the legacy of colonialism of European dominance. Postcolonial literature is of particular importance.
