Subcommittee on public lands and forests.Â In recent months the Subcommittee on Forest and Public Lands has repeatedly looked at the impact of land management on forest-based communities in addition to a field hearing on rural resource-dependent economies that was held in Redmond, Oregon. The subcommittee has looked at a number of issues involving fire prevention, logging, thinning, and old-growth protection. Right now in Oregon the catastrophic fires have taken an enormous toll and are certainly an indication of the need to restore our forests and public lands.Â And second, the national forests and public lands are in desperate need of restoration to establish healthy fire-adaptive ecosystems and to improve water quality and quantity.
