1. To Kill a Mockingbird, Harper Lee. Published in 1960, this coming-of-age novel became an instant classic of American modern literature. To Kill a Mockingbird is told from the perspective of Scout Finch, a six year old tomboy growing up in the Deep South with her brother Jem, and law.

Moving closer to her, he placed a hand on the small of her back possessively to let it be known that she was with him. When the bartender approached for their orders, she stared at Eli for a long moment.

Eli stared at him for a while before rising, leaving the tiny wood paneled office, pulling Riley with him as he left. "Eli, Chief." As she came closer to the house, the woods fell away to reveal a tree lined road that led to the massive three story structure that was Villa de Kent. It was an old plantation house from the 1700’s that Jonas had renovated. The original columns remained, freshly painted a blindingly brilliant white.

I was ready to teach Alexander how to mix colours. Yet, his eyes must be better than mine because he creates the perfect shade without the struggle to try it on the canvas.
